The results attained are, the ratification or approval of the Treaties by the Mikado; an agreement to ravise the tariff, and an engagement that the indemnity due under the Convention of October 1864 shull be pondto:dly disharged. But the choice hetween the payment of the indemnity and the opening of these places rested with the Troion's Government, and they never evinced the least hesitation as to the election they have mid-. the adoption of improved opinions as to foreigners and their trade. It completes the valididity of our position, and thus detrives the Daimies of the principal present they have bitherto had for assailing the Tycoon and the foreigners he has admitted into the country. If they continue their contest with the former it must take other grounds. and the latter will no longer furnish the ortensible cause of contention. As a measure, therefore, which is calculated to remove or abate an hostility which would probably have defeated every affort to extend our trade at new parts, the Mikado's ratification of the Treaties will prove, I trust, a far more valuable concrésion than immediate admission to a port, the opening of which cannot, under Treaty and express agreement, be deferred for more than two years from this dute. It must be borne in mind that the Tyccon in signing the Trentics without the approval of the Mikado took upon himself, as the event has proved, greater responsibilites then he could perform. My predecessors had therefore clearly seen, as is well known to your Lordship, that the union of the Mikado with the Tycoon on the foreign question was essential to the security of the relations hased upon there Treaties, and that unless union were at once effected, no extension of present privileges could be obtained through the "vecour's authority alone, and probably other and more serious em-
